

Overview

The government is an important client for business. Every year, The Dutch government makes purchases worth tens of billions of euros for any number of products or services – from the construction of roads, to the purchase of office furniture or a software system, to the hire of cleaning companies or consultants.

Through procurement, these purchases are done in a transparent and non-discriminatory way and entrepreneurs have an equal opportunity to win work.

Dentons Boekel is one of the few firms in the Netherlands with an independent Procurement Law practice. Our experienced lawyers have extensive knowledge of the Dutch and European laws that contracting or tendering companies must deal with. We work for clients involved in areas such as healthcare, education, (social) housing, project and area development.

Our firm also provides regular in-house training.

Contracting authorities

We assist contracting authorities in shaping the content of their procurement policies and support them in the procurement process. Our specialists carefully check that process and assist contracting authorities in disputes. We also evaluate the eventual tender held by the client.

Tenderers

We advise clients enlisting in a tender and check carefully whether the contracting authority observes the rules. When irregularities occur in the tender process, a legal procedure is sometimes unavoidable. Our lawyers advise and assist clients on this. Finally, we evaluate the outcome of the tender and, if required, advise on improvements for the future.
